1. The following information on Zielona Gora (German: Gruenberg) dates through Dec 53.

Administration

Population

25X1A 3. Zielona Gora was only slightly damaged during World War II. In June 1950 Zielona Gora was made the county capital. Before World War II Zielona Gora had 26,000 inhabitants but now [REDACTED] its population is well over 40,000.

City Plan of Zielona Gora

25X1X 4. I have prepared a large town map of Zielona Gora drawn to a scale of 1: 10,000. [REDACTED] map on Zielona Gora is available [REDACTED] at the CIA Map Library, together with a Street Legend, giving names of streets and coordinates for locating them on the map.

70	Zołdrzanskie Zakłady Przemysłu Metalowego im. M. Nowotki	F,G,H-2	Formerly the 'Wagmost' a large metallurgical plant located in the northern outskirts of the town near the railway station. This enterprise was largely expanded in 1950-1951 and now employs around 3,000 workers. It mainly produces railway cars ordered by the USSR. (These freight cars have the characteristic long 'Russian' Silhouette with rounded roofs, and each equipped with a typical brakeman's cabin.) The cars are fitted to normal gauge, and it is said that they are operated by the Soviet transportation system within the satellite countries. From time to time, special Soviet Central commissions cars to the plant. It is known that all cars manufactured here are sent in the direction of Elbląg (German: Elbing) or Giżycko (German: Allenstein) to a Soviet depot on the Polish-Soviet frontier in East Prussia. The Nowotki plant also manufactures parts for bridge constructions (for example, the elements for the Odra bridge in Czajcice (German: Odereck) were manufactured in this plant.)

74	State brewery and soda water factory	G-7	In the southern outskirts of the town.
75	Panstwowa Lubuska Wytwornia Win	F-5,6	State-operated wine plant. Zielona Gora is a well-known wine producing locality, but is rather known for its poor quality wines. Before World War II, Zielona Gora lost out to a large extent in the competition with wine growers from the western areas of Germany, and its wine then was manufactured for local consumption only, and its vineyards remained partly uncultivated. After World War II, the Polish administration started to rebuild the vineyards with the assistance of experts from the former Polish vineyards in and near Zeleszczyki in southeastern Poland which were incorporated into the USSR after World War II. In 1953, 44 hectares of the Zielona Gora vineyards were under cultivation in the southeastern part of the town. It is planned to slowly rebuild the vineyards in other parts of the town. The two large Zielona Gora wine-producing factories base their production on the vineyards located around Zielona Gora. In this area 1,317 hectares of land are now covered with vineyards.

Stalin Street.

With a monument on Bohaterow Place.

Constructed during World War II by the Germans, in the former vineyards on both sides of the highway leading toward Leżica (German: Lassitz). This object, enclosed by a rolled barbed wire fence, is said, according to rumors around the town, as an underground ammunition dump and as storage for armaments. Other rumors say that there is also some kind of production in this object. Another underground military storage dump is said to be located in the area west of Zielona Gora where brown coal pits operated some time ago. No information up to now (Dec 53) is available on the status of the Zielona Gora brown coal area. It is known that one pit under the name of 'Henryk' is still in operation. It is located around five kilometers southwest of Zielona Gora north of the Wilkanowo village (German: Wittgenau) where there is a small settlement called Heinrichshau. No particulars about the production are known.
